

In My Garden With the current virus lockdown, just going to a nursery to browse is not an activity which is available to us. Although I note that the big green shed is still operating openly. Since we have some time to spare staying home, having a look online at some of the Australian plants available to be delivered to your home address might just stimulate some activity.

Australian plants nurseries selling online

The following list contains some nurseries which supply Australian plants as tubestock. It is not meant as a complete list, and definitely not definitive.

Plants are generally well established and ready for planting now. Note that the nurseries listed are not my recommendations, as I have not used any of the services.

Wildtechnursery.com.au in East Gippsland has probably the most comprehensive range of Australian plants, including many which are rarely available. Has been established since the 1980's, and provides reliable service. Note that the nursery does sell in trade wholesale numbers, minimum of 14 per species, and it might be practical to get an order for bulk supplies if members were interested. Otherwise when visiting the site, choose Collector to see which species are available to purchase as single items.

Australianplantsonline.com.au supply tubestock with up to 800 species available at various times

Allnatives.com.au has a large range of tubestock and arranges weekly deliveries throughout Australia

Brenlissaonlinenursery.com.au operates from Mt. Rowan in country Victoria with a 17 year history of supplying online plants. A fair range of Australian plants is available in 50mm tubes

Coolnativesnursery.com operates at Armidale NSW and specialises in tubestock, supplying a good range of Australian plants

Eranurseries.com.au is based in Hamilton in Victoria and supplies a comprehensive range of seedlings in trays suitable for potting on.

Nativeplantproject.com.au on Victoria's Mornington Peninsular has a good range of tubestock

The Native Shop, at Wimmera Native Nursery, Dimboola sells a range of plants in 50mm tubes. Contact via email, wnn@bigpond.net.au

Gardenexpress.com.au sells anything and everything, but does have a range of Australian plants in 50mm tubes.

Onlineplants.com.au sells out of Melbourne area, supplying plants from a range of growers, mostly in larger containers, around 140mm size and therefore more expensive to transport.

Plantsinabox.com.au also supply a smaller range of Australian plants

Finally arrived. Norm and Lesley Hulands took a gamble, and purchased a box of plants from Allnatives.com.au. Due to delays in delivery by Australia post, which is busier than ever during the virus lockdown, they were worried how the plants might survive, having been boxed up for more than a week.

As the photo shows, the plants travelled well, and sprung back to life once released from their box.
